DENVER, CO - June 22, 2011 - Correctional Health Partners (CHP) announced today that its Board of Managers has named Jeff Archambeau as its new CEO. Jeff has been with CHP and parent company Physician Health Partners for more than five years. Most recently he has served as Vice President of Business Development.

Jeff has been an integral part of CHP's growth by leading and managing the development process through government proposals. Jeff has helped expand the company into Oregon and other sectors of correctional healthcare, such as county jails.

Jeff brings to this position more than 25 years of experience in healthcare where he worked to improve overall care, while controlling the costs associated. His background and experience will guide CHP in growth and healthcare delivery.

"We are happy to have Jeff leading CHP into new territory as our guide and leader." Steve Krebs, MD, Chief Medical Officer and former CEO, said. "We are in a great place to grow and expand and Jeff is the man to do that."

Dr. Steve Krebs stepped down as President and CEO to be the full-time Chief Medical Officer of both Correctional Health Partners and Physician Health Partners.

About CHP

Founded in 2005, Correctional Health Partners (CHP) is a clinically enhanced third-party administrator managing healthcare for correctional facilities. Currently, CHP has contracts with the Colorado Department of Corrections, Oregon Department of Corrections, Multnomah County Health Department (OR), Colorado Division of Youth Corrections and Colorado Mental Health Institute. CHP provides services such as prior authorization/utilization management, claims payment, provider network management and case management to their clients. CHP helps their clients manage the healthcare and, as a result, save taxpayer money and increase safety. CHP is a wholly owned division of Physician Health Partners. Both companies are based in Denver.
